About Dystonia. Dystonia is a neurological movement disorder that causes involuntary muscle contractions, which force the body into abnormal, and sometimes painful, movements or postures. Dystonia affects men, women and children of all ages and backgrounds and causes varying degrees of disability and pain, from mild to severe. It is the third most common movement disorder behind only Parkinson's and Essential Tremor (estimates suggest that at least 300,000 – 500,000 people are afflicted in North America alone). There is presently no cure, but some treatment options exist and scientists around the world are actively pursuing research towards new therapies, and ultimately a cure.

About Cure Dystonia Now. Cure Dystonia Now is a public charitable organization that is run by volunteers and is working with researchers on cutting edge treatments and ultimately a cure for Dystonia. We are pleased to be working with several of the pre-eminent scientists in the field of Dystonia, who comprise our Medical and Scientific Advisory Council (MSAC). The MSAC conducts peer-review of research applications, sets the direction of research and makes recommendations to the Board for funding research. Our initial funding is aimed at further development of several promising compounds identified through a cell-based screen, by testing them in mouse models of Dystonia.

More information about Dystonia and our organization can be found on our website at www.curedystonianow.org.
